

A level Religious Studies

Why study Religious Studies?

Religious Studies offers learners the opportunity to question the philosophical and ethical ideas that are present within the British religious tradition. These are important as, even if we are not from this tradition, or any tradition at all, they inform and shape the society and the values that we live by. Everyday life, from newspaper articles to social media, from arts and literature to celebrity culture reflects these dilemmas of thought. These problems have been the source for some of the most influential and persistent of human questions; how should we live? What are we here for? Are we free? Is there a purpose to it all?

Why study Religious Studies at Solihull Sixth Form College?

- We offer a varied and thought-provoking course that focuses on the philosophy of religion, religion and ethics and developments in Christian thought.
- You will gain insight into the place of religion in the modern world and be encouraged to see the world from new perspectives.
- There are plenty of opportunities for developing your employability skills through debating, presenting and constructing arguments in essays.
- You will be taught in a supportive department by specialist A-Level teachers who are experts in Religious Studies.

Case Study

Among the recent successful learners to have taken this course is Estella Hope.

She came to the College from Cockshut Hill School and excelled at A level, achieving all A* and A grades in Religious Studies, Psychology and Politics.

She has progressed to the University of Cambridge to read Theology.

“Applying to Cambridge was a difficult process, but the College offered me lots of help. I had help with revising my personal statement to the standard required and meetings with other applicants to help each other out. Having mock interviews with my teachers also helped as good practice for the real thing.”
- student Estella Hope
